CITY OF EL OUED

OUED SOUF BREIF HISTORY

El Oued, town, largest of the Souf Oases in northeastern Algeria. It lies in the northern Sahara some 50 miles (80 km) west of the border with Tunisia. Surrounded by the sand dunes of the Grand Erg Oriental, the Souf Oases extend for 25 miles (40 km) northwest to southeast. A river (oued) once flowed to the east, but it was swallowed by the encroaching sands.

The town sits in the midst of the oasis and has narrow winding streets with cube-shaped buildings of clay-stone topped by cupolas. The houses are clustered, creating the image of a "Town of a Thousand Domes," so-called by the French writer-adventurer Isabella Eberhardt (1877-1904). The town's fortress mosque and use of arcades and arches reflect both Moorish and Roman influence.

Date palm groves are grown in man-made funnel-shaped craters that are protected from the sand by woven palm walls and are close enough to groundwater to eliminate irrigation. A busy caravan centre, El Oued exports high-quality dates and is known for its carpets and woven cloth. Its Museum of the Souf contains regional exhibits. Pop. (1998) 104,801; (2008) 134,48
